California interior designer James Lumsden turned to the color of Chinese famille rose china for the deep, delectable pink of his dining room. Decorative painter Matthew Menger applied layers of paint to the walls using both stippling and color-washing techniques. The result is a richly hued and textured background for his collection of Spanish Colonial art and eighteenth-century Mexican folk art angels.

This playful pink child's room designed by Steven Miller Design Studio in San Francisco uses delicate painted detail to create a faux-formal French effect. Both walls and ceiling are enveloped in the same rosy shade, with white decorative touches, such as raised moldings and garlands, painted freehand on the walls. The cameo pillows on the trundle bed are custom-made.
