Covered in sumptuous blue mohair, a club chair with traditional curvy French lines and a yellow chrome circle side table sit in front of an acrylic screen. The screen features a mid-century metallic wallpaper sandwiched between clear panels that adhere to the frame magnetically.

Clad in geometrics of all kinds, the master bedroom created by interior designer Steven Miller pays homage to the styles of early-20th-century Paris. The space, bathed in natural sunlight, is enhanced by a modern interpretation of a classic blue-and-white color scheme made graphic with paneling and fabric.

"This showhouse was a Beaux Arts-style building, so I used French influences and made a salon-style room," says Steven.

Painted-on faux wall moldings in alluring Prussian blue make a striking contrast against the room's stark-white walls. Dressing the window are drapery panels in blue satin with a cotton "coin" overlay in white, continuing the blue-and-white palette. A window seat features a blue-and-white cushion in a coordinating Greek key motif. Knotty loop carpeting echoes vintage Chanel suiting fabric. French sketches hung above a desk with Lucite legs bring to mind the creative richness of 1920s Paris. ■
